About Me

Mardia Gibson
(Mar - dee - ā Gib - son)

As a trusted employee turned owner, I had the privilege of working as an event specialist alongside founders Tammy and Erica Horning. I helped cultivate the warm and welcoming atmosphere that our guests have come to know and love.

Stepping into the role of owner felt like a natural progression for me because hospitality has been a core value throughout my life. From childhood, I learned the importance of welcoming others, serving those around me, and creating an environment where people felt safe, valued, and cared for. This followed me into my collegiate years, as I was drawn to a school whose core values were mercy, service, and hospitality.

My commitment to serving others eventually led me to spend a year serving in South America, where I gained experiences that broadened my perspective and strengthened my passion for people, community, and hospitality.

After returning to the States, I joined the team at REology.

About Reology

REology is more than just an event venue, we're a space where people, businesses, and the community come together.

For over a decade, REology has occupied the old Raub Supply building on James and Mulberry street; Sharing the building with Mulberry Corner Apartment, James st Mennonite Church and Gall Laminating Co.

REology first started as a workshop space where you could come in with a party and paint. Over the years, we've transitioned into more of an event venue – though we hold true to our roots and still offer in-house crafts that can be added to any reservation.
